Paiute Indians

Old Mormon Fort

Thomas L. Williams

The history of North Las Vegas begins with Native Americans who inhabited the Las Vegas Valley over 10,000 years ago. Around 700AD, Paiutes settled here, migrating between nearby mountains in the summer and spending their winter in the valley, near Big Springs. The area was named Las Vegas (The Meadows in Spanish) in 1829 by Rafael Rivera, a member of Spanish explorer Antonio Armijo's trading party who were on their way to Los Angeles on the Old Spanish Trail from New Mexico and stopped for water.

In 1875, Conrad Kiel (1807-1894) homesteaded a 240-acre ranch around a natural spring and artesian well, near the intersection today of Carey Street and Losee Road in North Las Vegas. In 1917, Thomas L. Williams of Eureka, Utah visited the Las Vegas Valley. Two years later, in 1919, Williams relocated his wife and three sons from Utah and purchased 160 acres a mile north of Las Vegas for $8 an acre near the current site of Jerry's Nugget on Las Vegas Boulevard North. He kept 60 acres for himself and offered the remaining 100 acres for only $10 an acre that included water and power.

Thomas L. Williams had built the community from the ground up, but he didn't want it named after him. It came down to a town board vote for either North Las Vegas or Vegas Verde (Green Meadows in Spanish). Vegas Verde won, but George Hansen, a town board member who detested the name, noticed at a town board meeting two months later that two of the board members who voted for Vegas Verde were absent. He quickly called for a new vote and North Las Vegas won.

In 1939, Thomas L. Williams died of a stroke, and a North Las Vegas elementary school and road were later named in his honor.

North Las Vegas is basically the northeast part of what would've been a larger Las Vegas. In the 1930s and 40s, there were multiple attempts at annexation, but it finally came to an end on May 1, 1946 when North Las Vegas incorporated as a city.

Today, North Las Vegas is one of the fastest growing cities in Nevada. Between 2000 and 2010, the population nearly doubled and now stands at over 250,000. Notable new North Las Vegas businesses include an 850,000-square-foot fulfillment center for Amazon and a 715,000-square-foot distribution center for Sephora.
