Historically, this area of Iowa was inhabited by speakers of the Siouan languages. Before the arrival of Spanish and French fur trappers - the Yankton Sioux, Omaha, and Oto peoples were the main Native American tribe living in the area in the early 1800s. In 1803, France sold a cast portion of central North America to the United States of America. The area encompassing the Louisiana Purchase was largely unexplored, until President Thomas Jefferson send out the Corps of Discovery under Lewis and Clark to scientifically survey and document the area. In 1804, the Lewis and Clark Expedition set up camp near what would become Sioux City, Iowa.

In 1849, French-Canadian fur trader Theophile Bruguier is believed to have been the first official settler in the area. Other fur trappers settled in the city and in a matter of few years the small community flourished. Bruguier convinced another fur trade outfitter from Council Bluffs, James Jackson to come upriver and establish a trading post. Jackson convinced his father-in-law, Dr. John Cook of the area's potential as a future city, and in 1854, in his official capacity as Surveyor for the United States Federal Government, Dr. Cook laid out and established the town of Sioux City. In 1857, the Town of Sioux City was incorporated with a population of 400 residents.

Lewis & Clark Expedition

With the development of commercial routes via the many Rivers crossing the area, and via railroads between 1856 and 1868, large factories and immigration began sprouting. During the second half of the 19th century, Sioux City was a major exporter of livestock and corn. Within 10 years, the local population grew from 7,500 (1880) to 38,700 (1890).

Sioux City experienced severe weather and flooding during the last decade of the 1800s, and again between 1950 and 1960. Although these natural disasters caused problems for the local economy, the City has experienced significant urban renewal, urban development, new public attractions including museums and theaters. In 1962, and again in 1990, Sioux City was twice named an All-America City by the National Civic League.

Today Sioux City is a thriving city with a clear vision:
becoming a community where people want to live, work, visit and raise a family. A city proud of the past and focused on the future!
